With 4.5 million people of whom 56% are landless; of low agri-productivity and with primitive healthcare, the climate-vulnerable Sunderbans is one of the most backward regions in West Bengal.

This project aims to address these issues by adopting climate-resilient agricultural practices, including innovative techniques like solar-micro irrigation, which can reduce carbon footprint and help establish sustainable livelihoods for this marginalized coastal community.

This initiative seeks CSR funding to support the formulation and implementation of these strategies. Furthermore, this project can be replicated in other climate-vulnerable regions as well.
